Feminist legal theory, is the analysis of law, from a ...

Although there are a variety of different theories which have very different approaches on the subject matter, they work on a few common normative assumptions.

The notion that men and women are of equal legal and moral worth and that they have a right to non discrimination and to have their rights fulfilled under the law is the common basis to all theories.

Since the 1950s women have been trying to have their voices heard and needs represented within domestic and international law.

Womens collective demands have evolved over time becoming more complicated and nuanced to the different needs different women have and how these could be better accommodated within legal frameworks. As each dominant voice has evolved it has also been labelled as a generation.

This module will examine three significant generations of feminist legal theory. The three main generations of feminist legal theory are: equality or liberal feminism; difference feminism; and, intersectional feminism. There are also other forms of feminism such as socialist feminism, black feminism, eco-feminism, post-structural feminism, and trans-feminism.

It will also enable you to navigate the diverse and sometimes contradictory arguments of feminist scholars. Each of the successive generations aim to have a response to critique of the previous generation and try to fill the gaps which were not guaranteeing all women substantive equality.

It works on the idea that gender should be irrelevant to the distribution of legal benefits and burdens.

Women were frustrated with being pigeon-holed into administrative and secretarial positions within the workforce.

The common belief was therefore either that women were uninterested in seeking positions of authority within the workforce or that they would not be able to commit the hours.

This generation of feminist legal theory is known to accept the language and aims of the laws as they existed but wanted women to be more included and represented within the existing legal framework.

This premise reinforces the liberal feminist legal theory's claim that most of their arguments arise from the idea of individual rights. Their main objective is to implement the law based equally for all individuals.

As women were frustrated at not having the same opportunities as men this theory focused on trying to eliminate differences and gender stereotypes between men and women's abilities.

The liberal feminists' main aim was therefore to dismantle the sex-based legal distinctions that had been established purportedly to protect women but that served to exclude them from positions within the workforce.

Liberal feminism has been criticized for multiple reasons.

Second liberal feminism has been critiqued for essentialising women (assuming all women are the same) with the same set of needs, aspirations and starting point in society (e.g. the same socio-economic resources, educational qualifications and level of acceptance by employers).

The second generation, difference feminism rooted its arguments on the basis that though the equality approach had helped women get more rights than they previously had the basis that men and women were equals in every sense was faulty.

Both of these concepts recognise that law, as it existed ...

It has helped to expand equality provisions and prompted the emergence of equality impact assessments in some countries to ensure policy or legal decisions do not disproportionately affect one gender over the other. Further, women wanted guarantees that the same job with the same responsibilities would be available upon their return to work.

Legal responses to difference feminism include mandated maternity leave which gives women the legal right to paid time off work to give birth and nurture a baby and the right to return to her job after this has been completed.

This provision recognises that new mothers need financial support when it will be difficult for them to return to work and that due to nursing and the physical impacts of childbirth women need specific provisions not applicable to men.

These provisions are for the exclusive benefit of pregnant women or new mothers. The Maternity Benefit Act therefore recognises women's difference from men regarding reproduction and accommodates this within legislation.

Different countries have tried to accommodate biological differences between men and women that have resulted in disproportionate impacts against women within the workforce.

The dominant critique of difference feminism is that whilst it recognises women's biological difference from men it does not recognise differences between women.

Another critique of difference feminism is that whilst it provides for protections such as maternity leave this does not prevent women from still being discriminated against within employment regarding access to promotions and other rewards and benefits and does not promote structural change within society or the workforce.

The legislative history surrounding Title VII does not indicate that the goal of the statute was to create a new classification of black women who would have greater standing than, for example, a black male.

A critique of Intersectional Feminism would be that whilst intersectional feminism aims to unite all categories (or distinctions as they are often referred to) of a person's identity and to recognise that individuals may often experience discrimination and disadvantage due to multiple co-existing factors (eg race, sexual orientation, religion, caste etc)

Essentially the test comes with trying to be as inclusive as possible and being aware of difference and trying to prevent forms of discrimination from affecting women's equality of opportunity and equality of results.

This chapter has sought to explain what feminist legal theory is by looking at the dominant first three generations of feminist legal theory, their understanding of women's rights and where they are placed and understood in law.
